Search. Rise. Dominate.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

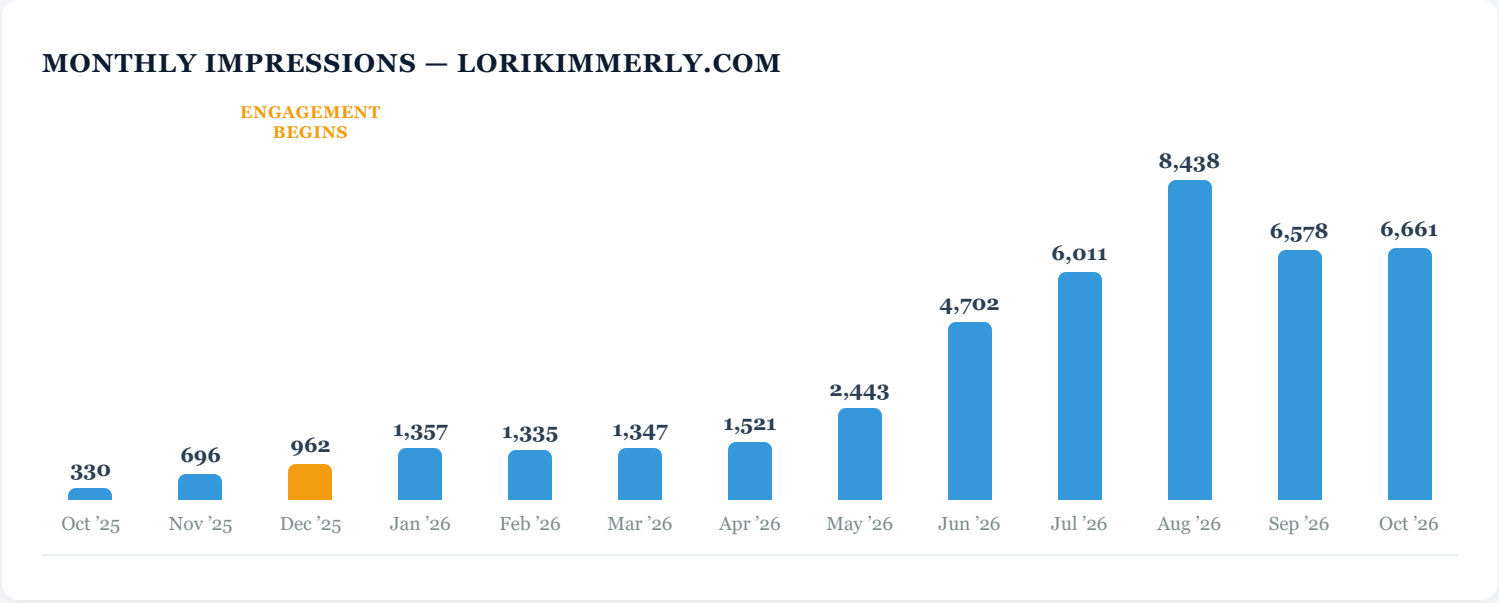

This quarter the site went from "getting seen" to "getting clicked." Clicks rose 74% over last quarter (436 → 760) and impressions rose 65% (13,156 → 21,677), and this time the growth came with a better click-through rate, not a diluted one. September was the strongest month for visits the site has ever had: 285 clicks, an average position of 8.9, and the first month the site averaged inside the top 10 across every search it appeared for. October held that level, with 249 clicks and an average position of 9.1.

The biggest single driver was the grief post, which is now the most-visited page on the site: 5,021 impressions and 210 clicks this quarter, up from 4 clicks last quarter, with every "gates of grief" search now sitting at position 4 to 6. The other headline is structural: the eight new service pages launched September 27 and, within five weeks, three of them were already on page 1 of Google for their target searches. Last quarter's number-one recommendation was dedicated service pages. They are built, indexed, and ranking.

Not every number went up. A few pages and searches declined this quarter, and each one is accounted for in "Where Numbers Dropped — and Why," with the cause. The report closes with our suggestions for growing faster, each with what it is, why it helps and what to expect from it.

GROWTH SINCE WE STARTED (DECEMBER 2025 – PRESENT)

The engagement began December 12, 2025. Zooming out past this single quarter:

Monthly impressions have grown from 962 in December 2025 to 6,661 in October 2026 — a 592% increase. Monthly clicks have followed: 75 in December, 137 in May, 226 in August, 285 in September, 249 in October.

Why August is the tallest bar: August's total includes a short burst of about 2,100 homepage impressions that Google did not attach to any search term. They came at very low positions and produced no clicks. Without that burst, August would have been about 6,350 impressions, so September (6,578) and October (6,661) were each a real step up, not a drop, and they came with more clicks and a much better average position (18.2 in August → 8.9 and 9.1).

SINCE DECEMBER 12, 2025
Blog posts published	8
Service pages built	9 (8 core services + Graduate Therapists sliding-scale page)
Active therapist bio pages	16
Total work items completed	281

Monthly clicks, then → now	75 → 249 (+232%)

GSC PERFORMANCE SNAPSHOT

METRIC	PRIOR QUARTER (MAY 1–JUL 31)	THIS QUARTER (AUG 1–OCT 31)	CHANGE
Clicks	436	760	+74.3%
Impressions	13,156	21,677	+64.8%
Avg CTR	3.31%	3.51%	+0.20 pts
Avg Position	11.9	12.6	-0.7 (see note)

What changed:

- Clicks: Up 74% — and unlike last quarter, the new impressions turned into visits. Clicks grew faster than impressions.
- Impressions: Up 65%. The grief post and the new tokophobia post opened two more topic areas the site had never appeared for, and the service pages added a third.
- CTR: Up. Last quarter's CTR dip (from early-stage, low-ranking queries) has stopped; the new content is now ranking well enough to earn clicks.
- Position: The quarterly average reads 0.7 lower, and that comes from growth, not from lost rankings. The site appeared for 460 brand-new searches this quarter, and new searches start low: they averaged position 19.8. Without them the average would be 11.9, level with last quarter. The searches the site already ranked for moved up, from an average of 18.0 to 11.0. August also included a short burst of homepage impressions that Google does not attach to any search term, at deep positions. September and October together averaged 9.0 — the two best months on record, and both inside the top 10.

New Keywords Earned This Quarter

460 brand-new search terms surfaced the site for the first time this quarter, bringing in 1,777 impressions between them. In total the site appeared for 624 different search terms this quarter, up from 481 last quarter. Most new terms are early, long-tail searches (nearly two-thirds showed once), which is how new topics start: Google tests a page on many small searches before it ranks it on the bigger ones. Where the new terms came from, by impressions:

TOPIC CLUSTER	NEW-TERM IMPRESSIONS	SOURCE
Tokophobia / fear of childbirth	676	Caroline Bacon's August blog post
Grief ("gates of grief" variations)	376	June grief post, still expanding
Services and local searches (Renton, Washington)	300	New service pages
IFS / Internal Family Systems	143	IFS service page
All new terms	1,777 (460 terms)

PAGES — MOVEMENT THIS QUARTER

How "Position" is calculated: each page's position is the average rank across every search query that page appears for, weighted by how often it showed up for each one. Google's first page of results shows about 10 organic listings — so a position around 7–8 means a page is landing on page 1, but toward the bottom, not a top-3 result. Blog posts moved to shorter web addresses on October 19; each post's numbers below combine its old and new address.

WHERE NUMBERS DROPPED — AND WHY

Not everything went up this quarter. Here is every meaningful decline and what caused it.

1. Local searches moved from general pages to the new service pages.

Before September 27 there was no dedicated page for couples, anxiety or men's therapy, so searches like "couples therapy renton" and "anxiety therapy renton" landed on whatever page came closest: the homepage, the team page, the contact page, the blog page or a therapist's bio. Now they land on the page built for them:

SEARCH	LAST QUARTER	THIS QUARTER
anxiety therapy renton	Spread across Jennifer's and Clayton's bios and the blog, positions 10.6 – 21	Anxiety page, position 5.9
therapy for men renton	Clayton's bio, position 5.4	Therapy for Men post, position 4.4
couples therapy renton	Homepage, Jared's bio, team page, blog and contact page, positions 9.6 – 11.8	Couples page, position 9.1

This is the main reason the team page (1,518 → 1,375 impressions), contact page (1,143 → 904), blog page (623 → 552) and Clayton's and Jared's bios show fewer impressions. The searches did not leave the site; they moved to better-matched pages. Clicks from the team page actually rose (26 → 39), and so did clicks from the contact page (6 → 10).

2. A small set of searches dropped out entirely.

Some local searches did not move to a new page; they stopped showing the site at all. The largest are "renton wa online counseling" (43 impressions last quarter, mostly the homepage at position 3), "evening therapy sessions wa" (34, the contact page at position 26), "marriage counseling renton wa" (17) and "family therapy renton wa". In total, 317 searches that showed the site last quarter did not this quarter: 728 impressions and 3 clicks between them. That loss was more than replaced by the 460 new searches the site gained (1,777 impressions).

What this points to: "family therapy renton wa" is one more reason for the Family Therapy page (suggestion #2 below), and "renton wa online counseling" is the strongest argument for location pages (suggestion #6).

3. Changes on three therapists' name searches.

- Kristen Sievert: searches for her name fell from 44 to 2, and clicks to her page slipped from 25 to 23. Her page still ranks #2 for her name, so the ranking is fine. Fewer people searched for her this quarter, which is outside what the website controls.
- Natalie Kim: more people searched her name (160 → 197), but her page's ranking for it slipped from position 6.5 to 9.6, and clicks to her page went from 25 to 20. This is a ranking loss, the one real decline this quarter.
- Jared Alleger: clicks fell from 19 to 14. Couples searches that used to reach his page now go to the Couples page (see point 1), and his name searches slipped slightly (position 7.9 → 9.3).

4. Clicks on the "www" version of the homepage (58 → 48).

This is a shift, not a loss. Branded searches ("lori kimmerly therapy") now go to the main version of the homepage instead of the "www" version. Total clicks from that search rose from 126 to 161.

5. Average position (11.9 → 12.6).

This comes from growth, not from lost rankings. The 460 new searches entered at an average position of 19.8, and without them the average would be level with last quarter. Searches the site already ranked for improved from an average of 18.0 to 11.0. The snapshot section above has the detail.

WHAT DROVE THE CHANGE THIS QUARTER

Blog posts published:

- When Fear Overshadows Joy: Understanding Tokophobia, by Caroline Bacon (Aug 10) — 1,965 impressions in its first 12 weeks, already ranking 10.9 for "what is tokophobia"
- Building Resiliency in Your Kids, by Leah Maughan (Sep 4) — 118 impressions, position 9.3, still early
- Therapy for Men: Why So Many Wait — and What Actually Helps (Oct 19) — 44 impressions at position 7.8 in its first two weeks

Service pages launched (Sep 27): Individual, Couples & Relationship, Anxiety & OCD, Depression, Intimacy & Relationship Issues, IFS, Trauma & PTSD, and EFT — each with full on-page SEO, structured data, therapist lineups by specialty, a Services menu, and internal links from the bios, the blog and the homepage.

New page (Oct 24): Graduate Therapists sliding-scale page — sessions from $40, linked site-wide (nav, cost FAQ, four bios, homepage section).

Team pages: new bios for Monique Meissner, Arielle Peters, Rosy Hood and Reuben Szabo; credential and rate updates for Jennifer Kenworthy, Clayton Holman and Sheena Nicolay; roster updates handled with redirects so no visitor hits a dead page.

Technical and structural work:

- Small technical fixes to keep the site usable on phones: menu, hero text, sideways scrolling and contact forms (Sep 18), and spacing on the homepage and blog (Oct 4)
- Main menu simplified to a single row, with clearer "About Lori" and "Our Team" labels
- One unified site-wide footer with social links; page headers refreshed on home, blog, contact and shop
- Structured data: Person schema corrected on every therapist bio so Google credits the clinician, not the admin account; validation errors fixed on 17 pages; business telephone, address and service area added to the site's local-business schema
- Blog URLs shortened to date-free links, every old link permanently redirected
- 52 internal links corrected to remove redirect hops; sitemap fixed to include two missing pages
- Booking buttons added to the end of every blog post; blog category filter fixed
- Server upgraded to PHP 8.3; comment-spam entry point closed; sticker shop live with a working cart
- Monthly homepage and team-page carousel rotation so every therapist gets time at the front

Social: 12 posts published across LinkedIn and Instagram, four each month.

SUGGESTIONS TO ACCELERATE GROWTH

Last quarter this section listed five opportunities. The biggest of them, dedicated service pages, is now done, and those pages are already ranking. Here are our suggestions for what comes next, in order of how much each should move the needle. These are suggestions, not commitments; we are happy to scope any of them.

1. Grief Therapy service page

What it is: a dedicated service page for grief and loss, built to the same standard as the eight launched in September.

Why it helps: the grief post is the most-visited page on the site (5,021 impressions and 210 clicks this quarter), but it is an article. There is no grief services page for those readers to go to next, and no page for Google to rank when someone searches for a grief therapist.

What to expect: a service page that the strongest post on the site links straight into. Three of the eight September pages reached page 1 within five weeks.

2. Family Therapy service page

What it is: a service page for family sessions, with the therapists who offer them.

Why it helps: the practice already sees families, and every graduate therapist lists family sessions, but there is no page for Google to rank. "Family therapy renton wa" showed the site last quarter and dropped out this quarter because nothing on the site answers it.

What to expect: a home for Renton family searches, on the same path as the September pages, within one to two months.

3. Pregnancy and postpartum therapy page

What it is: a service page for pregnancy, birth and postpartum concerns, including fear of childbirth.

Why it helps: Caroline's tokophobia post earned 1,965 impressions in 12 weeks and brought in 63 new search terms, the largest group of new searches this quarter. Like the grief post, it is an article with no service page behind it.

What to expect: a page that turns that new interest into a clear next step, and ranks for the therapy searches the post cannot.

4. Insurance and payment page

What it is: one page that answers the practical questions: which insurance is accepted, what sessions cost, sliding-scale options and how to check coverage.

Why it helps: insurance is the second-largest topic on the site. The insurance post earned 3,774 impressions this quarter, and searches like "is internal family systems therapy covered by insurance" and "therapy seattle insurance accepted" are showing up with only a blog article to answer them.

What to expect: a page people can act on. It gives those searches a direct answer and links to the sliding-scale page and to booking.

5. A second blog post each month

What it is: one more fully optimized post each month on top of the one in your package, written by us or built from a therapist's draft.

Why it helps: content is what drove this quarter. One grief post produced 210 clicks, and one tokophobia post produced 1,965 impressions in 12 weeks.

What to expect: a new post typically starts appearing in search within two to four weeks and reaches its ranking range in two to three months.

6. Location pages

What it is: dedicated pages for where the practice works: in-person therapy in Renton, online therapy across Washington, and telehealth in Arizona.

Why it helps: "renton wa online counseling" was the largest search the site lost this quarter (43 impressions, position 3 on the homepage), and there is no page built to hold searches like it.

What to expect: a page for each place the practice serves, so searches that name Renton, Washington or Arizona have a page built to answer them. Start with one page, Renton or Washington online, and add the others if it performs.

7. Mobile tune-up

What it is: a full pass on how the site looks and works on phones, page by page: layout, image sizes and loading. We recommended this last quarter and are recommending it again.

Why it helps: most therapy searches happen on a phone, and Google ranks a site by its phone version. This quarter we made small technical fixes to keep the menu, text and forms usable on phones, but the full tune-up is still open.

What to expect: a smoother experience on phones. How much faster pages can load depends on the site's theme, so we would measure first and tell you what is realistic before any work starts.

8. Google Business Profile upkeep

What it is: monthly posts, updated services and photos, and answers to common questions on the practice's Google listing, which is what appears in Google Maps and the local results box.

Why it helps: "near me" and Renton searches show the map results before any website. An active, complete profile ranks better there.

A note on reviews: reviews are the strongest factor in map rankings, but professional ethics rules do not allow asking therapy clients for them, so we would not run a review campaign. The profile work above is what can be done.

WHAT'S NEXT (NOVEMBER – JANUARY)

Included in the package every month: weekly search monitoring, one blog post or SEO op (your choice each month), the included site hour (carousel and featured-post rotation, plus quick fixes you request), and the social posting plan.

Watch list for next quarter: the eight service pages settling into their rankings, the Therapy for Men post and the Graduate Therapists page building on their first search data, and the grief cluster, which is still growing.

Next report: early February 2027, once January's data has closed.

CONCLUSION

Last quarter was about reach; this quarter the reach turned into visits. Clicks grew 74%, September set the site's record for visits, and the grief post went from 4 clicks to 210. The site also gained the structure it was missing — eight service pages, a sliding-scale page, a unified footer and menu, and clean structured data — and three of the new service pages reached page 1 inside five weeks.

Next quarter the job is to let those pages mature and, if you want to grow faster, add the pieces that compound: new service pages for grief, family and pregnancy, and more content.
